NEW QUESTION: 1

You are the project manager for a new construction project in your city. Your longtime personal friend is bidding on the project. Your friend has asked you to give them an indication of the budget for this project so that they do not overbid and lose the deal. What is the most appropriate response?

A. Tell your friend that after all this time, they should know you better than to think you'd put your personal integrity on the line or compromise your job because of a conflict of interest. Decline to give them the information.

B. Tell your friend you'll give them the information if they'll promise not to tell anyone and if they'll agree to help you with some materials on your basement-refinishing project.

C. Give the information to your friend. You know their character and can trust that they won't tell anyone.

D. Give the information to your friend and inform the project sponsor so that the information can be shared with the other bidders as well.

Answer: A

Explanation:

This situation is clearly a conflict of interest and should be avoided. Decline to provide your friend this information.

NEW QUESTION: 4

As a portfolio manager and in the aim of defining the preliminary list of components to be included in your portfolio, which will serve as a starting point for developing a portfolio. You start by identifying existing and potential portfolio components by reviewing documentation such as business plans/proposals in order to

A. Provide a guiding framework to operationalize the organizational strategic goals and objectives

B. Understand the strategic priorities

C. Create a basis for decision making

D. Create portfolio scenarios

Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

You are in the the strategic alignment here and not in the governance process group. How do you know? The inventory of work (SPM V3 Page 43 - 4.1.1.2) clearly points out to this and to that at this stage, you define the starting inventory of work to be elaborated on the go. Being at this stage removes the "Define Portfolio" (which is in Governance) as a valid concept for the given scenario.

As per the Portfolio Management Professional Exam Content Outline, you identify existing and potential portfolio components by reviewing documentation such as business plans/proposals in order to create portfolio scenarios
