NEW QUESTION: 2

Which of the following are required when configuring a VSS?
(Choose two.)

- A. identical IOS versions
- B. identical supervisor types
- C. HSRP
- D. GLBP
- E. VRRP

Answer: A,B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

Section: Considerations for Expanding an Existing Network

Explanation

Explanation:

Identical supervisor types and identical IOS versions are required when configuring a Virtual Switching System (VSS). VSS is a Cisco physical device virtualization feature that can enable a pair of chassis-based switches, such as the Cisco Catalyst 6500, to function as a single logical device. There are two identical supervisors in a VSS, one on each physical device, and one control plane. One of the supervisors is active, and the other is designated as hot-standby; the active supervisor manages the control plane. If the active supervisor in a VSS goes down, the hot-standby will automatically take over as the new active supervisor. The supervisors in a VSS are connected through the Virtual Switch Link (VSL).

Hot Standby Router Protocol (HSRP), Gateway Load Balancing Protocol (GLBP), and Virtual Router Redundancy Protocol (VRRP) are First Hop Redundancy Protocols (FHRPs) and are not required when configuring a VSS. Conversely, one of the benefits of using VSS is that the need for HSRP, GLBP, and VRRP is removed. HSRP is a Cisco-proprietary protocol that enables multiple routers to act as a single gateway for the network. Each router is configured with a priority value that ranges from 0 through 255, with 100 being the default priority value and 255 being the highest priority value.

GLBP is a Cisco-proprietary protocol used to provide router redundancy and load balancing. GLBP enables you to configure multiple routers into a GLBP group; the routers in the group receive traffic sent to a virtual IP address that is configured for the group.

Like GLBP and HSRP, VRRP provides router redundancy. However, similar to HSRP, only one router is active at any time. If the master router becomes unavailable, one of the backup routers becomes the master router.
