All of the following statements are true regarding configuration management except which one?

- A. Configuration management controls changes to the product of the project.
- B. Change control systems are a subset of the configuration management system.
- C. Configuration management describes the physical characteristics of the product of the project.
- D. Configuration management requires acceptance decisions for all change requests to be made through the CC

Answer: D

Explanation:

Change control systems are a subset of the configuration management system. Change requests should be approved by the CCB, but in the case of an emergency, change requests may be approved by the project manager in accordance with the process outlined in the configuration management system. The project team might have discretion to approve changes within certain parameters without CCB approval. Configuration management also describes the physical characteristics of the product, controls changes to the product, and tracks the changes requests and their status.
